The Index	1

Foreword

West Maui is very fortunate, compared to some communities, in that over thirty years of its community newspapers were microfilmed. Both the producers of newspapers and their readers rarely consider a community newspaper to have any value after being read. For a long time, professional historians also looked at newspapers suspiciously as a legitimate primary historical source. Librarians and other archivists who have recognized their value have had difficulty in preserving the newspapers. Despite these obstacles, West Maui community newspapers were archived starting in the year 1970.

As Hawai‘i has seen with the scanning and open access to nineteenth and early twentieth century Hawaiian language newspaper archives, newspapers are a valuable source for historical information. Newspapers retain a sense of the time in which the newspaper was printed and the society from which it was published.

In 2017, the Board of the Directors of the HK West Maui Community Fund agreed to fund two research projects: (1) to index and translate a representative sample of nineteenth century Hawaiian language newspaper articles related to West Maui and (2) to index the contemporary English language West Maui community newspapers. Somewhat uncertain and cautious, they broke the second project into two phases. The first phase was to index the Lahaina Sun (1970–1973) and what was available of the Lahaina Times (1976–1984). After reviewing the work of the first phase, the Board enthusiastically funded the second phase to index the more substantial Lahaina News (1979–2003).

The first project, related to nineteenth century Hawaiian language newspapers, was published last year by the North Beach West Maui Benefit Fund as Malu ‘Ulu o Lele: Maui Komohana in Ka Nupepa Kuokoa (distributed by the University of Hawai‘i Press).

This project is being provided in a slightly different form. It is being made available online publicly in a text searchable PDF through the University of Hawai‘i. At the same time, a limited number of printed copies are being distributed to libraries and other institutions that can serve as repositories of those with limited access to the internet. It will also be available for purchase online at cost through print on demand so that historians and others interested may obtain a printed copy.

The North Beach West Maui Benefit Fund is honored to support the publication of another work directly related to the history and current life of West Maui, its lands and its people.

Preface

This publication provides an index to the Lahaina News from its inception in July 1979 to the October 9, 2003 issue. The Lahaina News began as a monthly publication, changed to a bi-monthly publication in 1980, and then a weekly publication in September, 1983. The paper was accessed through microfilm copy available through the University of Hawai'i at Mānoa. Roughly 1100 issues of the newspaper, spanning 25 years, are included in this index. An additional six issues are absent because they were missing from the microfilm set: June 29, 1988, August 31, 1988, February 2, 1989, February 27, 1992, July 3, 1997, and December 16, 1999.

The publication also includes an index of the Lahaina Sun from 1970 to 1973 and issues of Lahaina Times published between 1980 and 1983 that were available on the microfilm collection. Only five of an estimated 40 issues of the Lahaina Times were available for indexing. Hopefully the remaining issues can be somehow recovered in the future.

Access to the microfilm was obtained from Hamilton Library at the University of Hawai'i at Mānoa with the help of Jodie Mattos, Hawaiian Collection librarian.

The entries in the index are arranged alphabetically by main header and then by date. When the newspaper included a supplemental publication, the pagination provided reflects that supplement's pagination or an appropriate alternative.

Most of the articles in the newspaper have been indexed in some form. Common entries include local sports and music, government meetings, developments, crime, business, etc. Events occurring outside of West Maui were also included if the story was judged to be relevant to the readers of the newspaper.

Sports articles were a significant part of the Lahaina News and attempts were made to index personalities, events, and results. Specific players and the results of league play are seldom indexed. The newspaper would often print team membership lists or detailed competition results.

An exception to the broad inclusion is the various "events and gossip" columns often included in the Lahaina News, which made passing mention of many people and events. These mentions were seldom indexed.

Determining whether people or events are significant depends in part on the whether the people or events were given a separate entry in the newspaper. If an upcoming event is announced multiple times, not all of the announcements are indexed.

In addition, the status for different entries in the newspaper changed from time to time. Upcoming musical events, for instance, would often have separate paragraphs, but this changed in the late 1980s when the newspaper began publishing a simple calendar that only provided the performer's name. The musical groups were thus indexed in earlier issues, but rarely in later ones. A similar change can be noted with crime. Where a crime or an accident was the focus of a particular article, it was indexed. At times, the Lahaina News would include a quick summary of multiple crimes, often petty, that occurred in the area. These passing mentions were seldom indexed.

Attempts have been made to standardize the names of organizations, people, and places, even if those names changed over time. Where the names of people vary, the name has been standardized. However, if people had similar or the same names but could have been different people, the entries were left separate. Attempts have been made to include “see also” entries for names with significant variations.

Photographs and advertisements are seldom indexed. Exceptions included photographs and advertisements that provided additional details on events described elsewhere in the newspaper. The Lahaina News typically reprinted the graduation pictures of students at Lahainaluna High School, which are referenced collectively under the heading of Lahainaluna High School but not individually indexed.

For Hawaiian terms, diacritical marks were seldom, inconsistently, and sometimes incorrectly used in the newspapers. They have generally been included to the headers but the descriptions, which are based more closely on the text in the newspaper, have typically not been changed.

Finally, obvious typographical errors have been corrected.

The scope of the index allows users to trace responses to the influx of hippies in the early 1970s, unsuccessful efforts to restore Malu‘ulu O Lele, and Linda Lingle’s early political activities, with the first mention in 1984. While hotels, tourism, and real estate figure prominently, sporadic mention is also made of land rights, Hawaiian sovereignty, poverty, and social issues. Infrastructure issues, and especially sewage and roads, are pervasive. The Lahaina Bypass is first mentioned in 1986 and by 2003 work is still said to be years away.

The index thus provides a snapshot of West Maui through the editorial and corporate lens of the local newspaper. Of course, a more critical use of the index would also consider what was not included in the newspaper, or what was treated with cursory attention.
